London, March 1. The following Manifesto is Printed in French in this City.

The Manifesto of the Protestants of the Sevennes.

THE People of the Sevennes and the adjacent Country, who have taken Arms in the Cause of Liberty, to all that shall read these Presents, Greeting.

The Heavy Wrongs we have undergone, for the space of twenty Years, were so publickly impos'd, that we cannot doubt they have reach'd the Ears of most of you: But seeing our Enemies have done their utmost to conceal or at least misrepresent them; we will inform those that may be ignorant, of the Particulars. 'Tis notorious, that our Province was inhabited wholly by the Reform'd; That we, as well as the other Parts of France, had full and entire Liberty of Conscience, free Exercise of Religion, and as free Admission into all Offices and Employments, no distinction being made between us and Roman Catholicks. No sooner was the Peace of the Pyrenees concluded, but they began to make use of Shifts and Artifices, and found ways to exclude us from Offices, and hinder us from getting our Livelihood. Our Ministers were imprison'd on frivolous Pretences; we were disturb'd in our Religious Exercises; We were oppress'd with Taxes and Imposts. These things we bore with much Patience, contenting our selves with laying our Complaints before the King and his Ministers, with all Submission. At length, our Enemies thought fit, in 1685, by an Edict, to cut off all our Privileges, to strip us of all Employments, to tie up our hands from Traffick, Trade, &c. to Banish our Ministers, and demolish our Churches; and all this without any Provocation given on our side, contrary to the King's Word, his own Edicts and Declarations, and those of his Predecessors. This Edict assur'd us, That we might remain in Peace, every one under his own Roof, till the Holy Ghost should enlighten us; Yet they perfidiously let loose an Army of Mercenaries upon us: You were Witnesses, Dear Country-men, in what manner those Ruffians came into our Houses, and Blaspheming the Holy Name of God, took away our Children, abus'd our Wives, and Daughters, consum'd our Goods, and plagu'd us with all the Mischiefs they could contrive, so that there was no freeing our selves from their Clutches without promising to change our Religion: Death was not at our choice, for the Dragoons might be as licentious as they pleas'd, but might not touch our Lives; Nor durst we attempt to leave the Kingdom, for fear of being sent to the Gallies. In this Condition we remain'd till this time. Wherefore, things being brought to that pass, that we can neither live at quiet in the Kingdom, nor go out of it freely; we can no longer look upon them as Governours who treat us as Enemies; and have resolv'd to make use of the Means Nature has given us for our Preservation. We invite all our Neighbours to joyn us, and throw off the Yoak of Slavery under which they have long groan'd. As for such as do not joyn us, but sit still and do us no hurt, we promise not to molest them either in their Persons, Goods, or Religion; but on the contrary to protect and defend them, of what Religion soever they be: But, for those that have been or shall be found in Arms against us, as we expect no Quarter from them, so we are determin'd to give none, but will treat them just in the same manner they have treated or shall hereafter treat us.
